

location, location, location!

There are two things that Notre Dame absolutely loves: acronyms and stone buildings. Both of these can be very confusing the first few weeks of school, so we made it easy for you! We compiled maps of each quad and wrote down the real name and the more commonly used name of each building, Blue arrows point towards academic, social, and administrative buildings. Multicolored arrows point to dorms, and the colors represent the colors of each dorm.

There are 31 residence halls on Notre Dame's campus; 16 are male dorms and 15 are female dorms. Two new dorms are opening this year, Dunne Hall (male) and Flaherty Hall (female).

There are 5 main quads that these 31 dorms look out onto.

NORTH QUAD AND MOD QUAD

North Quad is home to the best dorm on campus—Cavanaugh of course! Many other residence halls also lie on North Quad. North Dining Hall (aka NDH) lies on the far North end of the quad, where many of the Cavanaughites eat. Mod Quad is home to four residence halls: PE, P-Dub, Knott, and Siegfried. The library and NDH now have entrances onto mod quad as well.

LIBRARY QUAD

Library Quad and the surrounding area are strictly home to academic, administrative, and social buildings. At the South end of the Hesburgh Library is a beautiful view of the stadium, surrounded by various academic buildings and professor's offices. Many Cavanaughites make good use of our close proximity to the library. The Hesburgh Library has 14 floors and is filled with desks, study rooms, white boards, and chairs for use by all students. The Library is currently undergoing renovations, but is still open for use.

WEST QUAD AND DEBART QUAD

West Quad has a bit of a confusing name because it is actually more southern than South Quad. However, South Quad was made far before West Quad existed so the University decided to call it West Quad. It is home to various residence halls. DeBart Quad is lined by numerous academic buildings, most notably DeBartolo Hall. DeBartolo is filled with classrooms and lecture halls, and most Notre Dame students are bound to have a class there at least once in their four years.

SOUTH QUAD AND GOD QUAD

South Quad is home to numerous residence halls as well as South Dining Hall, lovingly referred to as SDH. The Coleman-Morse Center (aka CoMo) also sits on South Quad, which is filled with the first year of studies department and campus ministry. God Quad gets its name because the Basilica sits on the Northern end of it. Only two residence halls, Walsh and Sorin, look out onto God Quad. The Western entrance of LaFun Student Center also exits onto God Quad. At the far north end of God Quad, the Golden Dome rises above campus, where Our Lady watches over the students.
